Pen pineapple apple pen thai real fruit guy

You know what an ear is? It's the kind of song you become clearly addicted to one that you can't get out of your head for days. Think of Psy's gangnam style. The new song by Japanese singer and comedian Pika Taroa, real name Kazuhiko Kosaka, is the latest tune to turn worms into the collective ear of the internet. Called PPAP, or Pen Pineapple Apple Pen, this one-minute masterpiece is all about man and his noble herring in order to combine pens with different pieces of fruit, in this case apple and pineapple. The clip was posted to YouTube in late August, but has gained most of its 4.5-plus million views in the past few days since it was posted on 9Gag's Facebook page, where it has gained just under 50 million views and nearly a million shares. He enjoyed a lot of love on Twitter, and partly #PPAPchallenge, who has people all over the world competing to make the best headlines. Pikotaro performs live at Japan Expo in Thailand | © Tofudevil/ShutterstockPikotaro began a career as a Japanese comedian at new heights in 2016 with PPAP (Pineapple-Pen-Apple-Pen) on the 2016 Billboard Japan Hot 100 with PPAP (Pineapple-Pen-Apple-Pen). Pikotaro has created one of the most captured viral tunes coming from Japan. Pikotaro is an alternative ego daimaou Kosake, who is the stage name of Kazuhiko Kosaka, who was born in Aomori, Japan. In 2005, he performed the comedy as part of the SOkonuke AIR-LINE, which mostly performed sketches, comedies and songs on television. Then, when Kosaka, 32, decided to focus more on behind-the-scenes work, before returning to comedy in 2008. Although he was successful enough to appear in commercials and even be selected as Aomori's tourism ambassador in 2015, nothing compared to the unexpected success of PPAP in 2016.Kosaka has already written music for a bunch of songs he intended to fill. He wrote the lyrics for PPAP at home while listening to the melody. He claims to have been genuinely inspired by an apple (coincidentally from his hometown of Aomori Prefecture, the largest apple producer in the country), along with an old can of pineapple, which he used to write. For the performance, Kosaka knew that he was not alone, but Pikotaro, who was the best for the job. As the first song on his new YouTube channel, he uploaded PPAP (Pineapple-Pen-Apple-Pen). Pikotaro performs live at Japan Expo 2017 in Thailand | © Tofudevil/ ShutterstockKosaka created his replacement character Pikotaro years ago to help him perform live comedy acts. Pikotaro is a completely different person from his human host. For one thing, he's 10 years older, born in chiba and enjoys listening to Mariah Carey and Stevie Wonder. Python-and-leopard-print-loving singer, his exciting dance, and simple English song lyrics had all the appropriate qualities, and (Pineapple-Pen-Apple-Pen) video went viral shortly after its October 2016 release on YouTube. The original video has more than 126 million views, but the actual number is easily double that thanks to many versions. Newly elected Japanese Prime Minister Shinzo Abe invited Pikotaro to dinner with Trump during an official visit to the US president in November. Last year, Trump's granddaughter Arabella posted a video of him singing Pikotaro's hit PAPP. According to the Japan Times, Abe told Trump during one visit to New York that he enjoyed a video that might give him the idea of bringing the two together. Pikotaro plans to continue writing the song, but does not expect to ever compete with the unwavering PPAP (Pen-Pineapple-Apple-Pen). Infectiously-catchy hoarworm 'PPAP' (short for Pen-Pineapple-Apple-Pen) was performed by animal-printed DJ Piko-Taro, a fictional character played by Japanese amusement park Kazuhiko Kosaka. I have a pen. I got an apple. Apple pen! I have a pen. I have pineapple. Pineapple pen! Apple pen. Pineapple pen. Pen-Pineapple-Apple-Pen. How did a 40-year-old DJ come up with such a bizarre song about an apple and pineapple pen? When I was recording this music with a play, I [just] ate it too much, the newly crowned internet star tweeted to fans from an account created for his newly forged character. Image copyright Science Photo Library Image caption Humble pineapple is at the heart of this bizarre catchy melodyTh has all the ingredients for a viral video formula: an addictive beat, funny lyrics and a ridiculously simple dance routine to set it. And it was only a matter of time before the minute song, which was first uploaded to Piko-Taro's official YouTube channel, would quickly spread to Facebook. While the original video went on a jumble of more than 4m views, entertainment portal 9GAG's Facebook video surpassed that it draws more than 44m views. Image copyright Twitter: PikotaroImage captionI have a pen... I'm devastated - I'm never going to get this song out of my head.' Facebook user Carlos Andrés Silva cried in a comment. Nelson Rivera Adrian Paige agreed to repeatedly witter the footage. So I'm very funny and extremely confused. Other users, such as Daniel Hou, who watched the video, pointed out Piko-Taro's unique wardrobe. I'm the only one who noticed that this guy is a real version of Borsalino [Kizaru] from One Piece, he said, referring to the popular flamboyantly-dressed manga-anime character. Catching one man's viral song may prove to be the burden of another. Please stop sharing this annoying song, it exploded on my source and it's going down the wall because it's so excited to listen, Facebook user Hiro Kenshida said in the lawsuit. At the time of writing, few of Japan's central news websites captured this ear pike, although it was widely spread internationally. There is no particular trend on Japanese social media. They already named him the next Psy, and it could even be that this was exactly what he had in mind - one catchable ditty, pushed by digital influencers, but with the precise goal of becoming a global phenomenon. Image copyright Facebook: 9GAGImage captionWho wore it better: Borsalino of Japan's famed One Piece manga-anime series or Piko-Taro? But the hype didn't stop there. Hundreds of tributes and headlines of Piko-Tar's melody have also appeared on Facebook, each gaining cult following of their own. A number of Japanese stars, including the popular duo Riko and Rika, have inked their own vines. It was even a heavy metal tribute, as well as the cover of Thai social media star Happy Poll. Hepburn: Pempainappōappōpen) is a single pikotaro, a Fictional singer-songwriter created and portrayed by Japanese comedian Daimaou Kosaka. [2] On August 25, 2016, it was released as a YouTube music video and has since gone viral. Since August 2020[update], the official video has been viewed more than 345 million times.[3] it has spawned a parody, and has been hailed as the new Gangnam Style by various newspapers and online media. [4] The single peaked at number one on the Billboard Japan Hot 100 and became the shortest single on the Billboard Hot 100. At the end of 2016, the songs on the Japan Hot 100 Year-end Chart were ranked 6th. The background and composition of Kosak, the creator of PPAP, said in an interview that he borrowed a song that sits in his house. He listened to the melody when he picked up the pen to start writing. He speculated about his background, being from Japan's largest apple-producing region (Aomori Prefecture), as he also realized that he had an open can of pineapple on his desk. [6] The song is written the C# smaller with a total time pace of 136 beats per minute. Pikotar's vocals range from F#3 to C#5 in the song. [7] The Cosplayer of Pikotaro Song was released on YouTube on August 25, 2016. In the video, Pikotaro, dressed in yellow Animal print costume, dances around, then sings English lyrics like I have a pencil, I have an apple. Uh! Apple pen while making a gesture of holding named items and grouping. The cost of the video was about 100,000 yen. [6] On September 26, Pikotaro released a video of how to do dance and gestures. On October 27, Pikotaro published a long version of the music video. On November 17, Pikotaro appeared in the Japanese edition of Sesame Street, where he joined Elm and Cookie Monster in singing their version of the song, Cookie-Butter-Choco-Cookie. [11] Since then, Pikotaro has re-directed the concept of PPAP in subsequent music videos, such as Beetle Booon But Bean and Bottle (BBBBB) [sic]. The release of PPAP was released on October 7, 2016, along with three other parts of the pikotaro. [14] The instrumental version of the song was available on October 12, 2016. [15] Viral Spread Video amassed about one million hits in its first month of play. [16] Kosaka observed that she was mostly popular with Japanese students. On September 27, 2016, Canadian pop singer Justin Bieber shared a video on Twitter that he called his favorite video on the internet. The video has since gone viral, recapping more than 1.5 million hits a day, and has been nautical as the new Gangnam Style of various newspapers and online media. [17] [18] [19] There are many videos of people who have made their own versions. She reached number 1,[20] on YouTube and stayed there for three weeks in a row. The PPAP cafe in Tokyo was open for 20 days from 1 November 2016. [22] CoVID-19 pandemic In response to the COVID-19 pandemic, Pikotaro uploaded a remix of the song ppap-2020 on April 4, 2020. In the remix, Pikotaro pretends to combine his hands with soap, and repeats washing! Washed! Washed! Up! while you're pretending to wash your hands. In the end, he tells the audience to pray for the people and the peace. [23] The song debuted on the fourth Billboard Japan Hot 100 of 22 October 2016. [27] After falling to number three, he was in first place on the 14 November edition. [28] The song debuted on the Billboard Hot 100 in the US at number 77 and at 45 seconds in length, making it the shortest song in its history at this time. The previous shortest song was The Little Boxes at The Womenfolk, which reached number 83 in 1964 and was 1 minute and 2 seconds long. [29] The fact was recognised by the Guinness World Records. [30] The song has since resu commissioned twice, at number 82 for the week of November 26 and 93 in the week of December 3.
